Lorraine Gamman

■

Professor of Design at Central Saint Martins and Director of UAL's award-winning Design Against Crime Research Lab.

Engaging and Co-designing with Prisoners

Dr. Lorraine Gamman explores how art, design and creative engagement processes can reduce crime. An authority in applied social design practice, she is co-creator of a range of award-winning anti-crime product interventions and online resources that interpret and address offender techniques, and utilises creative interventions to attempt to reduce crime.

Lorraine teaches in the UK and overseas as Visiting Scholar to international design schools and is currently advisor to the UK's National Criminal Justice Arts Allowance. She has co-developed significant research funded projects and design outputs and presents extensively on her research and design approaches. She works with policy-makers, crime prevention practitioners, students and communities; and draws on creative teaching and learning methods to involve professionals, local groups and prisoners in designing against crime.

Yanki Lee

Architectural designer, social innovator, design activist and expert in design research for social inclusion.

Let's Design AS the Others!

Prof. Yanki C Lee is part of the inclusive design movement in the UK since 2000 and active in the Participatory Design Conference network since 2002. A graduate from MA in Architecture at the Royal College of Art (RCA, London) and PhD in design methodology from the Hong Kong Polytechnic University, Yanki practices as a design researcher and social innovator, Yanki founded two collectives: Exhibit at Golden Lane Estate CIC in London in 2005, and Enable Foundation, a registered charity, in Hong Kong in 2016. Since 2017, she has conducted social design projects funded by the HKSAR government's Social Innovation and Entrepreneurship Development Fund and the Hong Kong Jockey Club Charities Trust to tackle social issues such as ageing innovation and critical ecologies through design research and actions while she is also a visiting professor at the Design School Kolding, Denmark, and the Design+Change Programme at Linnaeus University, Sweden.

Nicos Souleles

Professor member of the Faculty of Technology, Multimedia and Graphic Arts of Cyprus.

Dr. Nicos Souleles has been a professor of Art and Design in higher education since 1995. Together with a group of friends and colleagues, he directs the “Art Design: elearning lab” (member of the DESIS network), which works on research projects funded in the areas of multiple literacy, curriculum development for the Third Sector and cultural and artistic entrepreneurship for marginalized women.
